Results show 90% support for ridding Paris of 'self-service scooters' whose riders are accused of flouting rules of the road

02 April, 2023

- Parisians have voted to rid the streets of the French capital of rental electric scooters, with an overwhelming 90% of cast votes supporting a ban, official results show.
- Paris was a pioneer when it introduced e-scooters, or trottinettes, in 2018 as the city's authorities sought to promote non-polluting forms of urban transport.
- But as the two-wheeled vehicles grew in popularity, especially among young people, so did the number of accidents: in 2022, three people died, and 459 were injured in e-scooter accidents in Paris.
- In what was called a "public consultation", voters were asked: "For or against self-service scooters?"
- Twenty-one polling stations were set up across the city and were open until 7 pm local time. Although 1.6 million people are eligible to vote, turnout was expected to be low.
- The ban won between 85.77% and 91.77% of the votes in the 20 Paris districts that published results, according to the City of Paris website on what was billed as a rare "public consultation" and prompted long queues at ballot boxes around the city. The vote was non-binding, but city authorities have vowed to follow the result.
- Paris's socialist mayor, Anne Hidalgo, has promoted cycling and bike-sharing but supported a ban on e-scooters.
- In a recent interview, Hidalgo said "self-service scooters are the source of tension and worry" for Parisians and that a ban would "reduce nuisance" in public spaces.
- Paris has almost 15,000 e-scooters on its streets, operated by companies including Lime, Dott and Tier. Opponents argue that e-scooter users disrespect the rules of the road and regularly ignore a ban on riding on pavements. The vehicles are also often parked in a disorganised way or even thrown into the River Seine.
- In June 2021, a 31-year-old Italian woman was killed after being hit by an e-scooter with two passengers onboard while walking along the Seine.
- "Scooters have become my biggest enemy. I'm scared of them," said Suzon Lambert, a 50-year-old teacher from Paris. "Paris has become a place of anarchy. There's no space any more for pedestrians."
- Another Parisian said, "It's dangerous, and people use them badly. I'm fed up."
- Julian Sezgin, aged 15, said he often saw groups of two or three teenagers on e-scooters zooming past cars on busy roads. "I avoid going on e-scooters and prefer e-bikes as, in my opinion, they are safer and more efficient," he told the Guardian.
- Bianca Sclavi, an Italian who has lived in Paris for years, said the scooters go "too fast" and should have their engines limited so they go slower. "They are dangerous because they zip in and out of traffic," she said. "However, it is not as bad as when they first arrived ... The most dangerous are the drunk tourists!"
- She is not planning to cast a vote. "There are more serious matters right now – what about the rubbish? Pension reforms? Immigration? I don't think it was such a good idea for Hidalgo to make such a big deal out of this. I really like what she is doing with the bike lanes, but she should not spend so much energy on the scooters."
- Linda Joëlle, 35, spoke out against a ban. "Now that I have found an excellent way to get to work, and one that is better for the environment, they are trying to ban it," she said. "They keep changing the rules."
- One student supporting e-scooters said, "I don't live that close to the Métro, and so it's better to go to school on the e-scooter." Another said, "Where I live, it's better than going on foot."
- The French Transport Minister, Clement Beaune, told Europe 1 radio recently that he expected the vote to result in a ban, adding that "the important consultation will be watched by a lot of other towns in France and abroad."

- 19 "I find it a shame that we have dumbed down the debate," he said, arguing that e-scooters are a valuable transport solution that has replaced up to one in five journeys in Paris that would previously have been made using pollution-emitting vehicles.
- 20 Meanwhile, operators of e-scooters fear a ban would encourage other cities to follow suit. "Paris is going against the current," said Hadi Karam, General Manager for France at California-based Lime, citing decisions to increase the number of e-scooters or extend contracts in Washington, Madrid and London.
